

Celebrating Hellström, Voullaire, and Moravian Romanticism: Treasures of 19th Century Moravian Music

On Moravian Music Sunday, we take the time to thank God for the gift of music, a heart-felt expression of the faith, love, and hope that we share as brothers and sisters in Christ.

Whether singing, playing, or listening, we are all recipients of and participants in a musical tradition that has been passed down through the centuries. Today we prayerfully consider this rich and vital legacy of music.

This year, we celebrate the 200th birthday of both Georg Friedrich Hellström (1825-1912) and Henri Marc Hermann Woldemar Voullaire (1825-1902). Both composers represent a period of Moravian music that is often overlooked in favor of the earlier “Golden Age” of 18th century Moravian music. For that reason, we are choosing today to remember the rich musical tradition of 19th century Moravians. Embracing the new musical techniques and ideas of the era (known today as “Romanticism”), these composers ushered in a new style of composition that was both rooted in tradition, while also emblematic of its time. The increased value placed on emotional expression resulted in a new form of musical worship. Equally important, this was also a period of adjustment for the larger Moravian Church, which was confronting a new world rapidly changing with advances in technology. This new reality was reflected in the novel musical aesthetic that Hellström, Voullaire, and other composers of the era championed.

As we celebrate this music, let us remember that the sounds that fill our churches today are a reminder of those that have come before us, but also a reflection of who we are today.
